Annotation: in this article we consider the development of creative abilities of high school students by creating landscapes of nature. And how and with what they start their work. At the same time, this article reveals the peculiarity of the formation of the way to create a landscape of nature. Despite this, the article analyzes the detailed tools that will be needed in art.

Keywords: development of creative abilities, landscape, arts, painting, high school students, nature, development.

In this article, the main feature is the landscape. And the word landscape itself is taken from the French language "Paysage" from the word pays-country or locality. And among this genre is the fine arts. Of course, the landscape of some kind of image is the inspiration of the artists and their views.

Before developing the talent of students, each teacher must know what the student is talented with. Having learned about the talent of the student, the teacher must direct him in the right direction with the necessary training, knowledge, goals, and others. With these directions, it will be easy for each student to develop his talent and move further up the stairs. Their talent development is thorough learning with the support of teachers or great artists.

Each creativity is relevant in itself and plays different roles in the life of each child. Nowadays, there are various training centers for the additional development of creative talents, namely the development of art. In these centers of learning, the student develops his talents well. They draw wildlife in gardens and, of course, before painting, they feel the whole nature of art, life, beauty itself and others.

The development of the creative abilities of high school students by creating landscapes of nature is training in the fine arts. That is, students are fully trained to draw everything thoroughly, which means the details are doubled than in the lower grades. But still, no matter how difficult the art, the landscape is the most beautiful drawing in the world, because the landscape attracts every person.

With all this, the teacher always helps and supports the students in the development of creative ability, despite the difficulties of the students. The teacher always shows and correctly directs to the desired result, while correcting mistakes by showing students how best to draw it, more specifically where to start their landscape drawing. They start drawing nature with animals or more difficult images like these:

It is not easy for beginner students of these arts to draw before they can draw, they need to learn everything. And before that, select and purchase all the desired colors of the brush and others. Otherwise, no matter how well the student draws, if all his accessories are not good, then he will not get such a rich drawing. Of course, no matter what drawing the student draws, if he does not have creative talent, then he will not be able to depict what he himself wanted to portray. This means creative talent also plays a major role in the visual arts.

The visual art itself is divided into several parts:

- painting,
- graphic arts,
- sculpture.

Since the landscape is popular in the history of painting, which inspires and attracts all artists with its simplicity, saturation, modesty, in which it has no unlimited possibilities in the visual arts.

With the development of creative abilities in high school students through the creation of landscapes of nature, they learn to appreciate their nature, while they begin to protect it. Of course, to portray him sincerely in a living form. Such creations not only teach creative art but also educate every high school student.

Thus, I want to say that the development of the creative abilities of high school students by creating landscapes of nature is one of the spiritual and traditional arts. But despite all this, the student must have a born talent which will be developed by teachers or artists. Because of this, both the talent and the teacher play a major role in teaching and developing creative abilities in students.
